1. The basics

Gender (or sex-based) discrimination: it includes sexual harassment, pregnancy discrimination, and unequal pay for women who do the same jobs as men.

Discrimination in education: in admission, recruitment, financial aids, discipline, grading...

Discrimination in employment: sex-based wage discrimination (it occurs whenever women who perform the same work as men are paid less than their masculine colleagues); pregnancy discrimination; sexual harassment (whenever the workplace has become permeated with inappropriate sexual behaviour); discrimination in hiring and firing practices (whenever a job applicant is treated differently than another, based solely on gender); gender bias in the promotion process and "glass ceiling" (whenever gender is an obstacle hindering the advancement of women at work). The "glass ceiling" metaphor is used to represent the invisible barrier that keeps women (or other minorities) from rising beyond a certain level in the hierarchy.

2. Women's response: feminism

Feminism: it is a range of political and social movements that intend to achieve political, economic, social and personal equality for women.

Types of feminism: liberal feminism (a movement that worked to integrate women in the structure of mainstream society via political and legal reform: it was the preferred approach of the Suffragettes and the Women's social Political Union in the UK in the early 20th century); radical feminism (a radical movement [≈ 1967-1975] that sprung out of the civil rights movements); socialist-Marxist feminism (a movement that attributed the oppression of women to the capitalist system: it has died out); cultural feminism (whereas radical feminists wanted to reform society, cultural feminists have been working to build a women's culture); eco-feminism (it is based on the idea that our patriarchal society exploits its resources regardless of the long-term consequences; eco-feminists resist patriarchal culture by turning to vegetarianism, protecting nature in the meantime); I(ndividual) feminism (a movement that calls for women's responsibility for their own lives; sexuality is considered a means of female empowerment; I-feminists no longer look to government for change).

3. Policy options for gender equality

Equal (employment) opportunity: the principle according to which all people should be treated similarly. Qualification should prevail over sex, race or sexual orientation.

Affirmative action programmes: meritocratic policies that aim to introduce fairness in the recruitment process via financial assistance for female applicants, gender-neutral recruitment...

Positive discrimination strategies: whenever an employer shows a preference for hiring or promoting members of a minority group using quotas. The law on parity in France (2000) is often considered a form of positive discrimination.

Gender parity

Facts and dates

1. The legal framework in the UK

1970: the Equal Pay Act; 1975: the Sex Discrimination Act (prohibits discrimination based on gender and marital status in employment, education and provision of services); 2002: the Sex Discrimination Act amended the 1975 Sex Discrimination Act; 2006 and 2010: the Equality Acts (protect people from discrimination at work); 2010: the UK Equality Strategy — building a fairer Britain: a report published by D. Cameron's government; 2011: Think, Act and Report (a government initiative providing a framework to help companies think about gender equality in the workplace).

The Equality and Human Rights Commission: a non-governmental body which works for the promotion and enforcement of equality and non-discrimination laws in the UK.

The Government Equalities Office: a government department in charge of promoting and improving gender equality within the UK government.

2. The legal framework in the US

1963: the Equal Pay Act becomes a federal law (employers must give men and women doing the same job equal pay regardless of their race, religion, or sex); 1964: Title VII of the Civil Rights Act (bars employment discrimination based on race, sex, and other grounds); 1967: Civil Rights Protections extended to women (Executive Order 11375 expands the affirmative action policies of 1965 [promoting the realisation of equal employment opportunity] to prevent discrimination); 1968: the Fair Housing Act (protects people from discrimination in the sale, rental or financing of a dwelling); 1972: Title IX of the Education Amendments (schools receiving federal funds have to provide equal access to education for men and women); 1974: the Equal Credit Opportunity Act; 1978: the Pregnancy Discrimination Act; 2009: the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act (a law that enables workers to sue for pay discrimination).